Course Description

This course examines issues in epistemology, metaphysics and philosophy of religion. Topics that will be covered include Platonic Forms, the nature of sensory experience, the relation between mind and body, non-existence, the ontological argument for God’s existence and the problem of evil.

Course Learning Outcomes

This course aims to develop the capacity to carefully evaluate metaphysical and epistemological theories. As part of this process students will be given the opportunity to develop their ability to produce clear written summaries of positions and arguments proposed by these theorists and to produce thoughtful assessments of these proposals.

Required Texts: Readings will be indicated via the D2L site for this class.

The final grade will be determined by three in class tests and one take home test. The tests involve writing essays on assigned topics. A drop box will be set up in the Philosophy Department (12th floor, Social Science Building) for you to submit your take home tests. Electronic submissions will not be accepted. Missed in class tests and late take home tests will be assigned a grade of zero unless a university approved justification is promptly provided. There is no registrar-scheduled final exam for this course.
