Course Description

The world of business involves relations between different groups of individuals. This world has shareholders, corporate managers, employees, suppliers, customers and those in the local community of a corporation. Since the actions of individuals in one group will impact those in other groups, it is open to us to morally evaluate such actions and the regulations governing those actions. For instance, is it permissible for, or perhaps even a duty of, corporate managers to serve only the interests of shareholders? Do corporations have a duty to refrain from destroying the environment? Does an employee have an obligation to reveal corporate wrongdoing? This course will address such issues.

Course Learning Outcomes

Based on a study of various ethical theories this course aims to develop the capacity to carefully engage in the moral evaluations of certain actions and regulations. As part of this process students will be given the opportunity to develop their ability to produce clear written summaries of positions and arguments proposed by various ethicists and to produce thoughtful assessments of these proposals.

Required Texts: Readings will be indicated via the D2L site for this class.

Course Assessment

The final grade will be determined by three in class tests and one take home test. A hard copy of your take home test will be submitted into a drop box located in the department of philosophy (12th floor Social Science). Electronic submissions will not be accepted. The tests involve writing essays on assigned topics. Missed in class tests and late take home tests will be assigned a grade of zero unless a university approved justification is promptly provided. There is no registrar-scheduled final exam for this course.
