COURSE INFORMATION

COURSE OBJECTIVES/LEARNING OUTCOMES

This is a text-intensive course. Please be prepared to read a significant amount, and to read very carefully. The course will entail reading, discussing, and closely analyzing the assigned readings. Students will be expected to interpret and to comprehend quite difficult philosophical texts. Students will be trained to encounter ideas, and analyze writings, that are from non-Anglo-American cultural settings and are translated from European non-English languages. Students will also be trained to recognize ways in which recent continental European philosophy articulates concerns that are of contemporary relevance.

Students will be expected to write clearly, concisely, and coherently. They will further develop their competence in the public presentation of written ideas; this will include clear, complete, and honest referencing practices.

Students will be expected to contribute clearly and effectively to class discussions.

REQUIRED READINGS

It is essential that students use the translations and the editions listed below; this includes any e-books students might decide to use. Failure to use the assigned editions and translations with correct pagination will automatically result in an F (=0) for the paper. For that reason, it might be advisable to get the paperback editions, but please give yourself plenty of time to order and receive the books.
